The Melbern G. Glasscock Center for Humanities Research is dedicated to fostering and celebrating the humanities and humanities research among the community of scholars at Texas A&M University and in the world beyond the academy.

The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) is a federal anti-discrimination statute that provides comprehensive civil rights protection for persons with disabilities. If you believe that you have a disability requiring accommodation, please contact us at (979) 845-8328.

The Melbern G. Glasscock Center for Humanities Research is dedicated to fostering and celebrating the humanities and humanities research among the community of scholars at Texas A&M University and in the world beyond the academy.

Susannah J. Ural is the Blount Professor of Military History, 2013-2014 and Co-Director of the University of Southern Mississippi's Center for the Study of War & Society. She specializes in the US Civil War Era and is the author of several books including Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It and The Harp and the Eagle: Irish-American Volunteers in the Union Army, 1861-1865. She is on the editorial board of several academic journals including Civil War History, War & Society, and The Journal of Military History, and she has a regular column, "Ural on URLs," in the trade magazine Civil War Times that highlights online Civil War resources for teachers and the general public, and has revived James I. Robertson's old column, "The War in Words," also with Civil War Times Illustrated. Ural is hard at work finishing her fourth book, Hood's Boys: John Bell Hood's Texas Brigade and the American Civil War.

General audiences tend to be familiar with U.S. Civil War generals like Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant, but the average Civil War soldier, who saw the war from the "worm's eye view," remains relatively unknown. And we know even less about the connections between these soldiers and their families and communities at home. Susannah Ural's talk, which is tied to her latest book, Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It, will provide attendees with a better sense of these men and their families in the Civil War era.

Susan J. Ural is the Blount Professor of Military History, 2013-2014 and Co-Director of the University of Southern Mississippi's Center for the Study of War & Society. She specializes in the US Civil War Era and is the author of several books including Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It and The Harp and the Eagle: Irish-American Volunteers in the Union Army, 1861-1865. She is on the editorial board of several academic journals including Civil War History, War & Society, and The Journal of Military History, and she has a regular column, "Ural on URLs," in the trade magazine Civil War Times that highlights online Civil War resources for teachers and the general public, and has revived James I. Robertson's old column, "The War in Words," also with Civil War Times Illustrated. Ural is hard at work finishing her fourth book, Hood's Boys: John Bell Hood's Texas Brigade and the American Civil War.

General audiences tend to be familiar with U.S. Civil War generals like Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant, but the average Civil War soldier, who saw the war from the "worm's eye view," remains relatively unknown. And we know even less about the connections between these soldiers and their families and communities at home. Susannah Ural's talk, which is tied to her latest book, Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It, will provide attendees with a better sense of these men and their families in the Civil War era.

DON'T HURRY ME DOWN TO HADES: SOLDIERS AND FAMILIES IN AMERICA'S CIVIL WAR

Thursday, 14 November 2013, 4 p.m.
Glasscock Center Library, 311 Glasscock Building, Texas A&M University
Lecture is free and open to the public, and refreshments will be served.

Susannah J. Ural is the Blount Professor of Military History, 2013-2014 and Co-Director of the University of Southern Mississippi's Center for the Study of War & Society. She specializes in the US Civil War Era and is the author of several books including Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It and The Harp and the Eagle: Irish-American Volunteers in the Union Army, 1861-1865. She is on the editorial board of several academic journals including Civil War History, War & Society, and The Journal of Military History, and she has a regular column, "Ural on URLs," in the trade magazine Civil War Times that highlights online Civil War resources for teachers and the general public, and has revived James I. Robertson's old column, "The War in Words," also with Civil War Times Illustrated. Ural is hard at work finishing her fourth book, Hood's Boys: John Bell Hood's Texas Brigade and the American Civil War.

General audiences tend to be familiar with U.S. Civil War generals like Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant, but the average Civil War soldier, who saw the war from the "worm's eye view," remains relatively unknown. And we know even less about the connections between these soldiers and their families and communities at home. Susannah Ural's talk, which is tied to her latest book, Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It, will provide attendees with a better sense of these men and their families in the Civil War era.

Thursday, 14 November 2013, 4 p.m.
Glasscock Center Library, 311 Glasscock Building, Texas A&M University
Lecture is free and open to the public, and refreshments will be served.

Susannah J. Ural is the Blount Professor of Military History, 2013-2014 and Co-Director of the University of Southern Mississippi's Center for the Study of War & Society. She specializes in the US Civil War Era and is the author of several books including Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It and The Harp and the Eagle: Irish-American Volunteers in the Union Army, 1861-1865. She is on the editorial board of several academic journals including Civil War History, War & Society, and The Journal of Military History, and she has a regular column, "Ural on URLs," in the trade magazine Civil War Times that highlights online Civil War resources for teachers and the general public, and has revived James I. Robertson's old column, "The War in Words," also with Civil War Times Illustrated. Ural is hard at work finishing her fourth book, Hood's Boys: John Bell Hood's Texas Brigade and the American Civil War.

General audiences tend to be familiar with U.S. Civil War generals like Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant, but the average Civil War soldier, who saw the war from the "worm's eye view," remains relatively unknown. And we know even less about the connections between these soldiers and their families and communities at home. Susannah Ural's talk, which is tied to her latest book, Don't Hurry Me Down to Hades: The Civil War in the Words of Those Who Lived It, will provide attendees with a better sense of these men and their families in the Civil War era.